The Israelites' first opportunity to enter the Promised Land approaches in this morning's Torah portion. Scouts are sent to explore the land. Upon their return they give conflicting reports as to what they saw. That by itself is not surprising given the land's physical diversity—coastal plains, mountains, and valleys. But unfortunately, the scouts' negative description of the land's inhabitants was believed. Funny, how pessimism tends to overshadow optimism. Of course, a negative report when warranted is justified; when groundless, it is nothing more than fear-mongering.

Join us for Kiddush today sponsored by Robert Schechter and Elisabeth Klock and Minda and Jeffrey Salberg in memory of Vivian Schechter, mother of Robert Schechter and Minda Salberg, and in memory of Estelle Salberg, mother of Jeff Salberg and Laurie Salberg.

We also wish a Happy Anniversary to all those celebrating with us today!
