How can the Torah describe a flame as being lit forever if it only burns from the evening to the morning? That riddle, as puzzling as it sounds, is raised in this morning's Torah portion. Not to despair, theology, as a reflection of life, is often filled with contradictions and paradoxes. One solution to the quandary comes from Nachmanides, or Ramban, who comments: "The western lamp of the menorah was lit continuously, while the others lights burned from evening to morning." That and more await your read of Parashat T'Tzavveh.

Join us for Kiddush sponsored by Judy and Ness Moadeb in honor of Ness' birthday. Happy Birthday Ness, and thank you to all.
